<td>The purpose of this panel is to highlight the contribution of women to interreligious and interfaith dialogue in Europe and in the Mediterranean region in particular. This region needs intercultural and religious actors to confront growing regional challenges. Interreligious and interfaith dialogue is a powerful tool for achieving peace and stability and for combating extremism. Institutions for intercultural dialogue and cooperation, religious representatives and interfaith organisations are working together to build mutual understanding in the Mediterranean area and in Europe. According to a number of studies, there is an urgent need to invest in the essential contribution of women as a response to the current challenges, including radicalization. What role do women, in comparison to men, play for the development of interreligious dialogue in the Mediterranean area and in Europe? Papers should address this key issue in terms of existing research, case studies, best practices. Language: English / Italian</td>

| 13.30-15.30 | 5/20 | The emergence of the Qur’an in late antiquity
Alba Fedeli, Fscire
The aim of this panel is to address the variety of interconnected issues that arise when questions concerning the Qur’an’s text at the beginning of Islam are explored in the late-antique context from an historical-philosophical perspective. The panel deals with a today widely studied paradigm, but many issues have to be explored, especially in relation to the parallel development of Christianity. We invite papers that deal with the Qur’an’s manuscript tradition as well as the variety of palaeographic, art historical, codicological, philological, philosophical-historical and textual criticism issues one encounters in this discipline.
Speakers:
• Massimo Campanini (Università di Trento), The problem of the Qur’an in late antiquity: reflection on a historiographical paradigm
• Beate Ulrike La Sala (Freie Universität Berlin), The topos of the “preserved tablet” (al-lauh al-mahfūz) in Al-Ghazzālī’s psychology

Language: English |
| 13.30-15.30 | 5/23.1 | Sacred Spaces and Visual History: Sacred Art as a Historical Source
Davide Dainese, Università di Bologna
The panel’s main purpose is to discuss several case studies in which works of art or even treaties on the esthetics of the so-called “Age of the Confessionalization” can be read and used as historical sources. Also theoretical issues will be taken into account.

Davide De Caprio, Université de Strasbourg

The view of Joseph Ratzinger, according to which the right political action depends on the capacity not to forget its rooting in a metaphysical dimension irreducible to the mere establishment of institutions and legal instruments, can only prove to be of high value when regard to recent discussion about the “return of religion” and the crisis of modern society. Through an interdisciplinary approach that combine several scientific areas (from international relations to moral philosophy), the panel’s aim will be to understand if and to what extent the theological discourse of the Pope Emeritus can provide a resource for the renewal of the vocabulary of political thought. From this angle, both the Ratzinger’s relationship with the major events of the XXth and XXIst century and that with some leading figures of the contemporary discussion about the best social order will represent a reference point for our investigation.

| 13.30-15.30  | 5/60.1| Between religion and philosophy – History of ancient egyptian thought
Paweł Karpiński, Jagiellonian University in Krakow

Ancient Egyptian literature contains many works that touch topics important for both European philosophy and major religions of Old World (Judaism, Christianity, Islam). Although many researchers are sceptical about seeking Egyptian roots of European thought, ancient texts show us many striking similarities between teachings and stories from Land of Pharaos and later texts from cultures of Mediterranean, including early christian tradition. This study group wishes to show a part of that ancient legacy of thought, based on egyptian stories, didactic literature and mythological texts. The speakers will consider such fields as metaphysics, aesthetics and ethics rised in these texts. The aim of this panel is to investigate which tropes could have been transmitted into later philosophical concepts and religious doctrines of such cultures as Greek, Roman and Judeo-Christian.

| 13.30-15.30| 5/64| The Bounds Between the Catholic Church, her Theology and Sports: Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow
Dries Vanysacker, KU Leuven
In the Anglo-Saxon world the bounds between the Protestant and Anglican Churches with sports are well-known. Several scientific initiatives and pastoral engagements underline this relationship. Muscular Christianity is everywhere. But what about the Catholic Church? Is there any interest in sports? Is it true that sports was regarded negatively since the body was perceived as a burden for the spirit and the soul? In this panel several contributors (historians, theologians and psychologists) will show that the Catholic Church and the Catholics from the start have been and still are – and more than ever – interested in sports and play.

| 13.30-15.30| 5/73| Towards the creation of an Online Atlas of Religious Minorities Rights in the Council of Europe Countries
Silvio Ferrari, Università di Milano
Rights of religious minorities are like the miner’s canary, their violation provides an early warning of a malaise affecting democratic societies. For these reason it is important to equip ourselves with tools that offer (a) an accurate picture of how these rights are respected and (b) a reliable system of measuring their real implementation. This workshop gives the opportunity to discuss the project of an Atlas that will provide these tools, mapping the different levels of minorities rights protection granted by each State and providing a general overview of the religious minorities social and legal status in the CoE countries. The workshop aims at collecting proposals that can improve the project and manifestations of interest for cooperating to it.

<td>Epistemology of mysticism&lt;br&gt;Anthony Feneuil, Université de Lorraine&lt;br&gt;&lt;br&gt;Mysticism is an object of literary, historical or sociological studies. But some philosophers as different as Henri Bergson or William Alston have suggested that the empirical study of mysticism could be a way of testing religious beliefs. What should be done with this claim today? There is an ongoing debate concerning the epistemological value of mysticism and this panel wants to contribute to this debate. We will investigate mysticism from the epistemological point of view: how can mysticism be a valuable source of knowledge, and of what kind of knowledge? It is also hotly contested in courts of law, as the religious label may grant certain tax and other benefits. Today, the question surfaces again in Russia and Hungary, two countries where different public authorities declared that Scientology is not a religion but a mere business, and even tried to ban it as an “extremist” or fraudulent organization. | 13.30-15.30 | 5/112.1 | Islam and Gender between Europe and the Middle East: Transnational Perspectives/Primary Sources of Islamic Theological Thought [starts at 13.00]
Hande A. Birkalan-Gedik, Goethe Universität / Alexander Boehmler, Université de Fribourg
This panel looks at gender and Islam from a transnational perspective and focuses on transnational space between Europe and the Middle East. Transnational space is not a simple transformation of concepts, discourses and practices from one place to the other. It is a space that presents us with a complex set of relations. It can enable the production of new meanings, complex discourses, and conflicting, complementing, or negotiated identities and actors, places, and practices. The panel considers such interactions transformations in the context of gender and Islam in Europe. In the first slot, the organisational aspects of building the new discipline will be discussed. In the second slot, we want to discuss historical and hermeneutical approaches on primary sources, especially the role of Hadith vs. Qur'an only approaches. In the third slot, we want to discuss Islamic theological perspectives on gender questions.

| 13.30-15.30 | 5/119.1 | Eastern Christianity and Interreligious Dialogue: the Road Not taken?
Thomas Cattoi, Santa Clara University / Brandon Galaher, University of Exeter
Contemporary developments in comparative theology and interreligious dialogue have been characterized by an almost exclusive emphasis on Western forms of Christianity—both Roman Catholic and Protestant—with relatively fewer voices from the traditions of Eastern Christianity (a broad term that includes Eastern Orthodox Christians, non-Chalcedonian Christians and Eastern Christian churches in communion with Rome). This study group wishes to counter this tendency and open up a space for interreligious conversation between Eastern Christian theology/spirituality/practices and non-Christian religious traditions. The group welcomes proposals from scholars of any religious tradition or none, working from the perspective of theology or religious studies.

The aim is to reflect on the processes and effects of translation linked with the possibility to connect different religious traditions. Religion and urban devotions: devotees in the city
François-Xavier Carlotti, Laboratoire de Recherche Historique Rhône-Alpes

The goal of this panel is a study of the religious life of the elites in the early modern era (17th and 18th century), seen from the point of view of urban devout networks. A certain number of men and women got involved so as to improve their inner lives while addressing others throughout the century. In doing so, they could earn their salvation. This panel goes along with major religious history works, similar to Louis Châtellier’s, Michel Cassan’s, Jean-Pierre Gutton’s works concerning France. More specifically, we will investigate the role of pious women through their social and spiritual involvement in cities. We will also deal with the urban spaces and social structures within which these men and women lived and worshipped together, at a time when religious practice focused on the individual.

Using historical and contemporary examples, the panel focuses on the intersection of interreligious dialogue and global politics and examines the role interreligious dialogue can play in fostering peaceful coexistence in diverse political contexts. Scott Thomas will begin by examining St. Francis’ encounter with the Sultan in 1219 and consider its relevance for contemporary international relations. Then, drawing on her research on the open letter, A Common Word between Us and You (2007), Sarah Markiewicz will discuss Christian-Muslim dialogue as a first step on the path to intercivilizational understanding. Melanie Barbato will use the example of the Vatican’s involvement in Hindu-Christian relations to show how the communication of religious organisations bridges the categories of politics and religion. Finally, Pasquale Ferrara will reflect on the role of interreligious dialogue in contemporary Italian diplomacy. Michael D. Driessen will conclude the panel by articulating several of the broad themes that the papers collectively pose for the future study of interreligious dialogue and global politics.

Luther as a Global Link. Recalling the 500th Anniversary of the Reformation

Federica Meloni, Fscire

At the end of 2017, the year dedicated to the 5th centenary of the Reformation, the panel aims to reflect on Luther’s role as a global link, an extraordinary connector for scientific works promoted all over the world and brought together in various national and international initiatives.

The three main topics of the discussion will be: the advance of historiographical reflection and its bibliographic production from the first editions of Luther’s writings to the latest studies; the institutional approach to the celebrations (i.e. the cases of Refo500, EKD and Mibact); and finally how in the global and digital era the aforementioned aspects have been able to create opportunities for a fruitful debate on an open issue: the challenge of overcoming divisions that remains as topical as ever.

Digital Faith? Youth, Social Media and Religion

Miriam Diez Bosch, Observatori Blanquerna de Comunicació, Religió i Cultura / Elisabetta Ruspini, Università Milano-Bicocca

Blanquerna Observatory on Media, Religion and Culture coordinates a panel – together with Prof. Elisabetta Ruspini, University of Milano-Bicocca, coordinator of the Framework Convention “Genere e Religioni” – on the relationship among young people, social media and religion. The panel will explore how social media use affects young people’s identity formation and the role played by religion in this process: is religion an answer, a problem or a resource for young people? The panel welcomes papers that analyse the intersection among technology, youth and religious diversity. Comparative researches and case-studies are particularly welcome.

Between religion and philosophy – History of ancient egyptian thought
Paweł Karpinski, Jagiellonian University in Krakow

Ancient Egyptian literature contains many works that touch topics important for both European philosophy and major religions of Old World (Judaism, Christianity, Islam). Although many researchers are sceptical about seeking Egyptian roots of European thought, ancient texts show us many striking similarities between teachings and stories from Land of Pharaohs and later texts from cultures of Mediterranean, including early Christian tradition. This study group wishes to show a part of that ancient legacy of thought, based on Egyptian stories, didactic literature, and mythological texts. The speakers will consider such fields as metaphysics, aesthetics, and ethics raised in these texts. The aim of this panel is to investigate which tropes could have been transmitted into later philosophical concepts and religious doctrines of such cultures as Greek, Roman, and Judeo-Christian.

Speakers:
- Michał Bizór (Jagiellonian University in Krakow), Origins of the creatio ex nihilo doctrine
- Alicja Neumann (Jagiellonian University in Krakow), Philo(sophy) of Alexandria. Echoes of Egyptian creation stories
A roundtable conversation about promoting Religious Pluralism and facilitating Ecumenical and Interreligious Dialogue for the 21st Century. Our world has never been in greater need of dialogue both within and between faith communities and of initiatives to promote religious literacy and religious pluralism. What are some examples of successful ventures toward such ends in recent times and what opportunities might there be for new types of initiatives along these lines in the future? This panel explores the origins and outcomes of a series of initiatives that have been developed at Georgetown University, Washington, DC, in recent years to promote Ecumenical and Interreligious Dialogue, and particularly religious pluralism. It will take the form of a roundtable discussion – each speaker will talk for up to 15 minutes initially, and then the conversation will be opened up to explore questions and interaction between the panelists and with the audience.

Jocelyne Cesari, who specializes in bridging religious studies and the social sciences, will speak about her extensive work on Islam and world politics, as well as her wider work on both sides of the Atlantic in relation to religion, peace, and conflict resolution. Leo Lefebure will speak about his work with the Parliament of the World’s Religions and his work on Buddhist-Christian dialogue as well as in relation to comparative theology in general; Sam Wagner will speak about his many years working in the Office of the Georgetown University President and the key collaborations, events and initiatives developed to promote ecumenical and interreligious dialogue. Finally, Gerard Mannion will speak about some experiences from his work with fostering ecumenical and interreligious dialogue through the Ecclesiological Investigations International Research Network and with the Berkley Center for Religion, Peace and World Affairs, as well as discussing collaboration to promote inclusion and dialogue between different entities of Georgetown across campus. Together the speakers will offer reflections on the highs and lows of seeking to foster dialogue in today’s world and why it is important that church-linked universities do all they can to promote dialogue and religious pluralism today.

- Jocelyne Cesari (University of Birmingham/Georgetown University)
- Leo Lefebure (Georgetown University)
- Gerard Mannion (Georgetown University/Ecclesiological Investigations)
- Samuel Wagner (Georgetown University)

Gregorio Bettiza, University of Exeter
The relationship between globalization, religious resurgence and political power remain poorly understood. For instance, post-secular writings often portray religious ethics, beliefs and actors as useful resources for challenging the excesses of neo-liberal economics, or promoting new forms of reconciliation and justice. Yet there is often a more complex and problematic side to these encounters. This panel seeks to explore how social forces linked to globalization, religion, and political power come together to, for example, foster multiple forms of religious fundamentalism and terrorism; revive old (and constitute new) religious, ethnic, and political cleavages; sustain the growth of far-right parties and populist movements; give rise to culture wars and narratives of civilizational clashes; or participate in novel forms of religious geopolitics internationally. In broader terms, the panel interrogates whether a post-secular age is likely to be a post-liberal one as well.

Epistemology of mysticism

Anthony Feneuil, Université de Lorraine

Mysticism is an object of literary, historical or sociological studies. But some philosophers as different as Henri Bergson or William Alston have suggested that the empirical study of mysticism could be a way of testing religious beliefs. What should be done with this claim today? There is an ongoing debate concerning the epistemological value of mysticism and this panel wants to contribute to this debate. We will investigate mysticism from the epistemological point of view: how can mysticism be a valuable source of knowledge, and of what kind of knowledge? About God, about religion, about the human mind or about society?

Islam and Gender between Europe and the Middle East: Transnational Perspectives/Primary Sources of Islamic Theological Thought

Hande A. Birkalan-Gedik, Goethe Universität / Alexander Boehmler, Université de Fribourg

This panel looks at gender and Islam from a transnational perspective and focuses on transnational space between Europe and the Middle East. Transnational space is not a simple transformation of concepts, discourses and practices from one place to the other. It is a space that presents us with a complex set of relations. It can enable the production of new meanings, complex discourses, and conflicting, complementing, or negotiated identities and actors, places, and practices. The panel considers such interactions transformations in the context of gender and Islam in Europe. In the first slot, the organisational aspects of building the new discipline will be discussed. In the second slot, we want to discuss historical and hermeneutical approaches on primary sources, especially the role of Hadith vs. Qur’an only approaches. In the third slot, we want to discuss Islamic theological perspectives on gender questions.

Contemporary developments in comparative theology and interreligious dialogue have been characterized by an almost exclusive emphasis on Western forms of Christianity—both Roman Catholic and Protestant—with relatively fewer voices from the traditions of Eastern Christianity (a broad term that includes Eastern Orthodox Christians, non-Chalcedonian Christians and Eastern Christian churches in communion with Rome). This study group wishes to counter this tendency and open up a space for interreligious conversation between Eastern Christian theology/spirituality/practices and non-Christian religious traditions. The group welcomes proposals from scholars of any religious tradition or none, working from the perspective of theology or religious studies.

The Russian Orthodox Church’s long journey in understanding the digital can be defined as a story about tradition and modernity, the encounter of a specific sub-culture with a global culture. These developments have affected both the ROC and the society, having an impact on both the liturgical Orthodox tradition and the spiritual individualism’s actuality. This raises the question about the way the Church’s relation with society and the State is changing in the digital era and moreover the way the ROC is trying to frame the new media. This panel’s main aim is a critical discussion on the relation between the new media’s language and the Orthodox religion in the contemporary Russia. It considers how it is changing the expression of faith and dissent toward the Church as institution; It also considers whether the “digitization of Orthodoxy” makes the Church closer to people, and affect the “believing without belonging” attitude that seems to be typical of contemporary Russian Orthodoxy.

| 10.30-12.30  | 6/34| Radical theories about theology and religion: the critical contribution of early modern philosophy
Antonella Del Prete, Università della Tuscia
Scholars have often highlighted the close connection between science, philosophy and religion that characterizes the culture of the Sixth and Eighteenth centuries. Our starting point is to show that even when there are apologetic intentions, this phenomenon calls into question the traditional relationship of subordination of philosophy to theology. The development of historical and textual criticism allows the elaboration of new theories on religion that significantly change the status quo and undermine the orthodoxies of all confessions. The purpose of the panel is to explore the contribution of early modern philosophy to a radical concept of religion.

In his new book Tempo e Dio (Queriniana 2018), Kurt Appel works out a theory of time, starting from Leibniz, Kant, Schelling’s late philosophy and Hegel. He demonstrates the central role of the concept of time in their philosophical and theological concepts. Time, as we usually consider it, is the linear and mechanical one of the chronometer. It expands ad infinitum, always in the same way. It is a continuum without quality, neutral and aseptic. The panel discusses the relationship between the secular time and the biblical time questioning the presuppositions of the first. Appel’s book tries to show that the biblical concept of time abrogates (aufheben) the secular concept of historiography based on the chronological time and leads to the name of God whose dignity lies in the vulnerability and the openness of being.

At the time of the contemporary society concern about the way to counter the violent erupt of radicalization trends connected to terrorism, it is important for academic researchers to engage into reflection. Hence this panel aims to assess the significance of education in theology and religion as a tool to counter radicalization, with a focus on a rationalistic approach of the founding texts of the religions, and on the development of the academic theology. Here the members of the Inter-Religio project intend to delve into these topics and present their late researches on this matter. Inter-Religio is an interuniversity and cross-border project (France, Germany and Switzerland). It is beneficiary of the INTERREG program and is co-financed by the European Union on the European Regional Development Funds (ERDF). EUCOR – The European Campus granted INTER-RELIGIO project its label.

The future of European Theological discourse
Gianluca Montaldi, Concilium

Theology has played an important role in the cultural history of Europe. Today it faces new challenges, built on the almost paradoxical coexistence of secularization and religious pluralism. Faced with the current situation, under what conditions does European theology have a future? The international journal of theology Concilium wants to make a contribution to better elaborate this question, presenting itself to the European public as a platform of operational dialogue since more than 50 years ago.

Jewish Conscience of The Church: Jules Isaac and the Second Vatican Council
Norman Tobias, University of Toronto

The fourth article of Nostra aetate is understood by most to have been an autonomous, unprovoked post-Holocaust Church initiative. In fact, it was a last-minute addition at the behest of, and provoked by, eminent French Jewish historian Jules Isaac, further to his private audience with Pope Saint John XXIII on 13 June 1960. This fact is attested to in writing by Loris Cardinal Capovilla, who at the time of the papal audience was the pope’s long time, trusted personal secretary. Each of the four panelists will present on a particular aspect, historical or theological, of the life of humanitarian and visionary Jules Isaac, and the backstory of how it came to be that the official Church would be influenced by, and pay heed to, a Jewish conscience.

Like silence, music is inseparable from religious (sacred, mystical, spiritual) experiences. Whether magnified, tolerated or forbidden, it is there, in one form or another. In other words, we are dealing with the nature of the special relationships of men and cultures with transcendence through music.
Dealing with the elements of fixity, variability and creativity in religious music raises these first questions (though they are not limited to these): What are the conditions for these features to emerge – or (perhaps) not? What are the limits (if any) to the religious musical work/expression, and to its potential variations?
What about the impact on listeners (auralities)? How does variability fit with fixity? In what way may creativity be exercised in the face of either fixity or variability? In which ways does the concept of “religious music” interfere with or reinforce creativity, and how do the ideas of fixity and variability intersect

Raffaella Di Marzio, LIREC
The panel aims to indicate some aspects that distinguish the history, the doctrine and the practice of the Ahmadiyya Muslim Movement, in relation to its peculiar way of placing itself within the Islamic World, which, mostly, considers it "heretical". This attitude, in the countries where the blasphemy law is in force, has caused the persecution of the members of the movement, which has reached extreme consequences, such as the murder of some of them by the mere fact of being Ahmadi. The experiences of two scholars, who have researched this field, will show how the movement has assumed a significant role in the resolution of conflicts and in the diffusion of a respectful and peaceful Islam.

Enrique Santos Marinas, Universidad Complutense de Madrid

The study of Medieval epics and hagiographies shows how the limits of genres are more fluid than they could seem to be. This way, there can be found both elements of hagiography in heroic poems, and vice versa epic characteristics attributed to Christian saints. This was very clear in Eastern Christianity, where popular religion developed in a very special way, combining elements belonging to the folklore that entered the literary compositions through the oral tradition. Like this, in the way between orality and literacy even some hybrid genres were created, such as the spiritual chants of the Orthodox pilgrims or some legendary narrations devoted to the saints that were very close to the folk tales. And it was during the oral transmission of the stories or poems before their written versions when the popular and folkloric elements were incorporated. In this panel, we will analyse several examples of the mutual relationship between epic and hagiography in the Eastern Christianity.

God(s): a “work-in-progress concept”: transformations and changes in God(s)’s image
David Villar Vegas, Universidad Complutense de Madrid

One of the most spread problems in Religious Studies is referred to concepts. We can have the temptation of analysing religious realities without thinking about research categories. God/divinity is one of these cases. We have a myriad of works about believers, piety, creation... but the notion of God could be presupposed. The aim of this panel is to debate not only about the changes in God(s)’s images and concepts, but also the continuity of several features that pass through one culture to another.

This panel, organized by the members of Instituto de Ciencias de las Religiones (Universidad Complutense de Madrid) wants to be a tribute to Karen Armstrong’s work, one of the pioneer researchers in this field.

A Korean “Rush Hour of the Gods”? The Success of New Religions in Korea, from Donghak to Daesoon Jinrihoe

Massimo Introvigne, CESNUR

Between World War I and II, Korean new religions had more members than traditional religions. Today, they still count their numbers in the millions. Although Taiwan and Japan, where the expression “rush hour of the Gods” was originally introduced, come closer, in no other country in the world have new religions been so successful. How was this possible? The session will trace the roots of contemporary new religions in Joseon Korea’s 19th-century social and religious crisis and show how Donghak was at the roots of all the subsequent religious effervescence. The failure of the bloody Donghak revolution of 1894, however, changed forever the attitude of new religions, and most switched from political activism to social welfare and charity. Through the Korean War and beyond, new religions such as Daesoon Jinrihoe gained credibility both as providers of social and educational services and as alternatives to traditional religions and mainline Christianity.

This panel is aimed at investigating the relationship between religion and change in a globalised world. The papers will deal with the following broad questions: how do world religions enable people to bring about change? And how do they allow them to express the desire for change or the impossibility of it? How has religion been changed throughout an increasing process of the deterritorialization and circulation of ideas, cultural objects and people?

The papers will analyse case studies in order to illustrate how world religions take root in and transform the local religious contexts. This dynamic will be shown also taking into consideration the longue durée of the world religions as «great vehicles of trans-historical memory, ceaselessly re-activated» by their adherents (J. D. Y. Peel, Religious Encounter and the making of the Yoruba, 2003, p. 9).

Hande A. Birkalan-Gedik, Goethe Universität / Alexander Boehmler, Université de Fribourg
This panel looks at gender and Islam from a transnational perspective and focuses on transnational space between Europe and the Middle East. Transnational space is not a simple transformation of concepts, discourses and practices from one place to the other. It is a space that presents us with a complex set of relations. It can enable the production of new meanings, complex discourses, and conflicting, complementing, or negotiated identities and actors, places, and practices. The panel considers such interactions and practices in the context of gender and Islam in Europe. In the first slot, the organisational aspects of building the new discipline will be discussed. In the second slot, we want to discuss historical and hermeneutical approaches on primary sources, especially the role of Hadith vs. Qur'an only approaches. In the third slot, we want to discuss Islamic theological perspectives on gender questions.

The election to the presidency of Donald Trump is a watershed not just for American politics, but also for American Christianity and its political projections and culture. The impact of the present moment deserves to be studied from a variety of points of view: the chronological dimensions of the issue of the relationship between “Christian politics” and secular modernity in America; the long-term debate within American ecclesiology and American political theologies; the recent developments of the latest decade with the shifts from the religious politics of the presidencies of George W. Bush, Barack Obama, and Donald Trump; the political-theological tensions between the presidency of Donald Trump and the pontificate of Pope Francis. In this context one example of the effects of the Trump presidency has been the article published by the Vatican-vetted Jesuit magazine La Civiltà Cattolica in July 2017 about the peculiar “ecumenical” convergences in the political theology of conservative Christians in the USA.

In those cases, the Canadian bar associations refused to approve TWU as a recognized law school because of a community covenant, including a chastity clause, signed by students upon admission to the university. The case has implications in relation to the autonomous existence of religious communities and how far religiously-affiliated academic institutions can establish voluntary religious codes of conduct; the extent to which the right to freedom of religion and belief is linked to the ability of individuals to manifest their beliefs within communities and; the extent of the right to freedom of association. 1618-2018: The Wars of Religion as a Historical Issue in the 4th Centenary of the Thirty Years War
Davide Dainesè, Università di Bologna

The panel’s main purpose is mostly to tackle the issue of the nature of the Thirty Years War: can we define it as a ‘war of religion’? If we look at it under a certain perspective, we may say that it actually was. Indeed, after all the main wars of the XVI-XVII centuries were considered wars of religion at that time. Moreover, the Thirty Years War broke out one century after the first 100 year anniversary of Luther’s Reformation — and in this perhaps we can glimpse the substantial difference between the XVI century wars of religion and and the Thirty Years War. Nevertheless, this war has resulted in the building process of the Modern European States — and this might be considered as a feature which is irreducible to the bare religious element.

The Future of the Grand European Narratives. Political, Theological and Philosophical Considerations
Kurt Appel, Universität Wien

Europe recently has witnessed the rise and fall of its grand narratives with their universal, often even imperialistic scope that have uniquely provided historical developments (enlightenment, socialism, secularization, liberalism etc.). Some of these narratives and imaginaries (e.g. human dignity or common public spaces) have also shaped the project of the European Community. Recently not only the European project but also political, humanistic and religious narratives seem to have succumbed to a profound crisis. This thus raises the question which new (religious) narratives can support a non-hegemonic European project and help develop an agora including both secular and religious traditions.

The panel investigates:
1. The affective and intellectual potential of new religious narratives for a vision shared by Christianity, Islam and the secular world;
2. The challenge of nihilism which implies the end of every human narrative;
3. Religion and new ecological narratives and imaginaries.

Like silence, music is inseparable from religious (sacred, mystical, spiritual) experience. Whether magnified, tolerated or forbidden, it is there, in one form or another. In other words, we are dealing with the nature of the special relationships of men and cultures with transcendence through music. Dealing with the elements of fixity, variability and creativity in religious music raises these first questions (though they are not limited to these): What are the conditions for these features to emerge – or (perhaps) not? What are the limits (if any) to the religious musical work/expression, and to its potential variations? What about the impact on listeners (auralities)? How does variability fit with fixity? In what way may creativity be exercised in the face of either fixity or variability? In which ways does the concept of “religious music” interfere with or reinforce creativity, and how do the ideas of fixity and variability intersect with this? How the contingencies of the performance influence the process of creation, (and/or) re-creation, variation, adaptation?

The perceived ‘golden age’ of ecumenism in the mid-late twentieth century was marked by an increasing bureaucratization of ecumenical engagement, dialogue and practice, helping to contribute to the decline of ecumenical endeavor as many organizations and entities engaged in dialogue slipped into a form of ‘industrial-scale’ ecumenism. The old-style approaches taken by bilateral and multi-lateral dialogues have reaped fewer and fewer results in recent times and have frequently been peopled by the same professional class of ecumenists, speaking about the same old issues and employing the same old methods. These two sessions will explore what new ways and means for advancing and promoting ecumenism for today’s world are emerging today. Questions considered will include: what new methods and forms of ecumenical engagement and practice might be developed in the near future? What are the reasons for the decline in the effectiveness of the old-style forms of ecumenical method and practice? What lessons can be learned from other forms of dialogue both throughout history and in differing forms beyond the ecumenical movement? Which institutions and organizations are best suited and best equipped toward being able to help facilitate the advancement of ecumenism today and into the future? What will tomorrow’s forms of dialogue look like and who can and should be involved in them? How can official church bodies and ecumenical organizations alike be persuaded to bring in differing voices and to listen to those voices? To what ends should ecumenical dialogue be pursued today?

This panel will address debates on the role of religion in social transformations in Africa. In recent years, African scholars have responded to the consequences for Africa of globalization, war and conflict, and migration. The changing cultural context demands new approaches from scholars of religion, and there are significant methodological changes to be noted in their work. Studies about religion in Africa used to be marked by a distinctive European perspective. Nowadays, the chosen sources and hermeneutics in the study of religion in Africa can be characterized by a dialogical approach. This raises questions about the authority and cultural background of theological sources, and about the possibilities and limits of the interchangeability of concepts. This panel explores these methodological questions through the discussions of research projects on the role of religion in social transformations in Africa.

Byzantium represented a crossroads of cultures. Through the way of the desert, the way of the steppe, and the Silk road, and incredible amount of biens culturals (Fernand Braudel) made their way to Byzantium. This panel aims to bring to light these ways of syncretism, métissage, and cross-cultural contamination through the mirror of literature and textuality. We invite papers which investigate the potentialities of literary objects in the constitution of religious discourses, identities, theories, and practices, in the Byzantine empire and in the premodern Christian East. Shedding light on these phenomena can be relevant for byzantinists, since it can contribute to write larger and more accurate histories of the Byzantine world, and for scholars of premodern literary cultures more broadly, as it underscores the potentialities of literature in the making of cultures.

Vincent Fortier, Université de Strasbourg
This panel will focus on several recent court cases which have in common to deal with the visibility of religion in various types of shared public and private spaces. These cases are a starting point for assessing how the European Court of Human Rights, the Court of Justice of the European Union and national courts handle and resolve the relations and tensions between the displaying of religious signs and symbols on the one hand and the increasing aspiration and demand for neutrality towards religion on the other. Be it for Muslim dress code in private companies, the wearing of the niqab or Christian signs in France, these cases are likely to put in light resonances from one court to another.

Silvia Cristofori, Link Campus University
This panel is aimed at investigating the relationship between religion and change in a globalised world. The papers will deal with the following broad questions: how do world religions enable people to bring about change? And how do they allow them to express the desire for change or the impossibility of it? How has religion been changed throughout an increasing process of the deterritorialization and circulation of ideas, cultural objects and people? The papers will analyse case studies in order to illustrate how world religions take root in and transform the local religious contexts. This dynamic will be shown also taking into consideration the longue durée of the world religions as «great vehicles of trans-historical memory, ceaselessly re-activated» by their adherents (J. D. Y. Peel, Religious Encounter and the making of the Yoruba, 2003, p. 9).

New hope of the sacred space between social renewal and intercultural inclusion. Toward an Intercultural Space: what good practices for the abandoned and underused sacred space?

Fiorella Dallari, Università di Bologna

According to WHC [PRI-SM], the religious heritage has characteristics that distinguish it from other forms of heritage. The religious areas are the oldest protected places of the planet, and «have a vital importance for safeguarding cultural and biological diversity for present and future generations».

This call aims to promote a reflection on the status and on the future of religious heritage through an interdisciplinary comparison of good practices for the abandoned and underused sacred space, and for the interreligious, and intercultural dialogue on sacred landscapes. Study cases, and concrete experiences of development are welcome from different disciplinary fields, like the religious and cultural memory of sacred buildings. Defining methods to the identification of Properties of Religious Interest and the need for sustainable management guidance should be the main aims for the future.

La riforma della musica sacra

Mauro Casadei Turroni Monti, Università di Bologna

The panel focuses on the meaningful role of the Bolognese archdiocese in regard to the main liturgical-musical changes both in Italy and beyond the Alps, from Middle Ages to the 19th century. At first devoted to the post-carolingian Bolognese church’s sacred-cultural events, afterwards the panel highlights some symbolic ritual-musical codices from the Dominican convents in late medieval Bologna. The other sections of the panel touch upon subjects from the active post-Tridentine Felsinean tradition to the cardinal Domenico Svampa’s European gaze on the Cecilian Reformation, during his bolognese archiepiscopate (1894-1907).

| 15.45-17.45     | 6/13| Religious education from different perspectives
Antje Roggenkamp, Universität Münster
How can we be sure that religious education works on the best of our European societies? In which conditions can we work in common, when do have to work on and in our own religion? Is there a gap between dialogue and “Konvivenz” (Feldtkeller, Sundermeyer) or should it be possible to bring both direction together? Discussing about those questions should be the aim of a panel which invites all those who are interested in any forms of common interreligious education.

The aim of this panel is to address the variety of interconnected issues that arise when questions concerning the Qur’an’s text at the beginning of Islam are explored in the late-antique context from an historical-philosophical perspective. The panel deals with a today widely studied paradigm, but many issues have to be explored, especially in relation to the parallel development of Christianity. We invite papers that deal with the Qur’an’s manuscript tradition as well as the variety of palaeographic, art historical, codicological, philological, philosophical-historical and textual criticism issues one encounters in this discipline.

The panel’s main purpose is mostly to tackle the issue of the nature of the Thirty Years War: can we define it as a ‘war of religion’? If we look at it under a certain perspective, we may say that it actually was. Indeed, after all the main wars of the XVI-XVII centuries were considered wars of religion at that time. Moreover, the Thirty Years War broke out one century after the first 100 yearth anniversary of Luther’s Reformation — and in this perhaps we can glimpse the substantial difference between the XVI century wars of religion and the Thirty Years War. Nevertheless, this war has resulted in the building process of the Modern European States — and this might be considered as a feature which is irreducible to the bare religious element.

The Future of the Grand European Narratives. Political, Theological and Philosophical Considerations

Kurt Appel, Universität Wien

Europe recently has witnessed the rise and fall of its grand narratives with their universal, often even imperialistic scope that have uniquely provided historical developments (enlightenment, socialism, secularization, liberalism etc.). Some of these narratives and imaginaries (e.g. human dignity or common public spaces) have also shaped the project of the European Community. Recently not only the European project but also political, humanistic and religious narratives seem to have succumbed to a profound crisis. This thus raises the question which new (religious) narratives can support a non-hegemonic European project and help develop an agora including both secular and religious traditions.

The panel investigates:
1. The affective and intellectual potential of new religious narratives for a vision shared by Christianity, Islam and the secular world;
2. The challenge of nihilism which implies the end of every human narrative;
3. Religion and new ecological narratives and imaginaries.

Speakers:

- Daniel Kuran (Universität Wien), Aesthetics of the dead. The narrative of terror and religious contributions to the public space
- Marlene Deibl (Universität Wien), “As if the shame of it should outlive him”. Possibilities of language after the end of grand narratives. An adventure with Kafka and Agamben
Like silence, music is inseparable from religious (sacred, mystical, spiritual) experience. Whether magnified, tolerated or forbidden, it is there, in one form or another. In other words, we are dealing with the nature of the special relationships of men and cultures with transcendence through music. Dealing with the elements of fixity, variability and creativity in religious music raises these first questions (though they are not limited to these): What are the conditions for these features to emerge – or (perhaps) not? What are the limits (if any) to the religious musical work/expression, and to its potential variations? What about the impact on listeners (auralities)? How does variability fit with fixity? In what way may creativity be exercised in the face of either fixity or variability? In which ways does the concept of “religious music” interfere with or reinforce creativity, and how do the ideas of fixity and variability intersect with this? How the contingencies of the performance influence the process of creation, (and/or) re-creation, variation, adaptation?

The Future of Ecumenism: Shaping Method and Practice for Today’s Times

Gerard Mannion, Georgetown University

The perceived ‘golden age’ of ecumenism in the mid-late twentieth century was marked by an increasing bureaucratization of ecumenical engagement, dialogue and practice, helping to contribute to the decline of ecumenical endeavor as many organizations and entities engaged in dialogue slipped into a form of ‘industrial-scale’ ecumenism. The old-style approaches taken by bilateral and multi-lateral dialogues have reaped fewer and fewer results in recent times and have frequently been peopled by the same professional class of ecumenists, speaking about the same old issues and employing the same old methods. These two sessions will explore what new ways and means for advancing and promoting ecumenism for today’s world are emerging today. Questions considered will include: what new methods and forms of ecumenical engagement and practice might be developed in the near future? What are the reasons for the decline in the effectiveness of the old-style forms of ecumenical method and practice? What lessons can be learned from other forms of dialogue both throughout history and in differing forms beyond the ecumenical movement? Which institutions and organizations are best suited and best equipped toward being able to help facilitate the advancement of ecumenism today and into the future? What will tomorrow’s forms of dialogue look like and who can and should be involved in them? How can official church bodies and ecumenical organizations alike be persuaded to bring in differing voices and to listen to those voices? To what ends should ecumenical dialogue be pursued today?

The desire to convert the whole world to one’s religion has always been completely foreign to Judaism, both modern and contemporary. There is not preselytism in Judaism religion such as Christianity and Islam. And yet Judaism is a universal religion in the sense that the Hebrew God guides the history of all mankind and proposes to all men universal human values. Judaism does not have a claim of universal truth inferior to that of Christianity or Islam and yet has had a conversionistic attitude substantially different.

The Panel wants to understand this substantially different attitude of Judaism in all its ancient history, and will examine little known cases such as the spread of Judaism between the Khazars and among the Berber tribes.

The Conference also wants to highlight how the Jews spread their religion, without resorting to systems of coercion, intolerance and without proposing a universal conversion of others to their faith.

Damiano Bondi, Facoltà Teologica dell’Italia Centrale |

The name of Denis de Rougemont is uniquely associated to one of the most famous works of the twentieth century on the erotic phenomenon, L’Amour et l’Occident (Love in the Western World, 1939). Few people know that in 1948 Rougemont was the rapporteur of the Cultural Commission of the Congress of The Hague, that in 1952 he presided the first Round Table of the Council of Europe, and that from 1950 until his death (1985) he headed the European Centre of Culture.

Very recently, two books by Rougemont has been translated in Italian: one is dedicated to the theme of Love before and after “L’Amour et l’Occident” (“La Persona e l’Amore”, Morcelliana, Brescia, January 2018), and the other one to the Christian roots of the Western Culture in an intercultural and interreligious perspective (“L’avventura occidentale dell’Uomo”, Campostrini, Verona, January 2018). One of the most exciting recent developments in 20th-century Christian theology has been an unprecedented interest in the person and work of the Holy Spirit. After being for centuries the ‘Cinderella’ of Christian theology, over the last decades the study of pneumatology has acquired a central position in the agenda of the ecumenical movement and in the works of various Eastern and Western theologians. The purpose of this panel is therefore twofold: first, it aims to both assess the level of ecumenical consensus reached so far on pneumatology and detect possible steps to be taken further in the dialogue between East and West on the doctrine of the Holy Spirit; second, this panel intends to explore the relevance of pneumatology today, when Christianity lives and carries out its mission in a globalised, multicultural and multi-religious world.

Law and religion: recent cases on neutrality and freedom of religion
Vincente Fortier, Université de Strasbourg

This panel will focus on several recent court cases which have in common to deal with the visibility of religion in various types of shared public and private spaces. These cases are a starting point for assessing how the European Court of Human Rights, the Court of Justice of the European Union and national courts handle and resolve the relations and tensions between the displaying of religious signs and symbols on the one hand and the increasing aspiration and demand for neutrality towards religion on the other. Be it for Muslim dress code in private companies, the wearing of the niqab or Christian signs in France, these cases are likely to put in light resonances from one court to another.

Speakers:
- Maria Cristina Ivaldi (Università della Campania Luigi Vanvitelli), Religious signs and symbols in public institutions through Italian cases
- Mariëtta D.C. van der Tol (University of Cambridge), Toleration and visibility of religion in the public space
- Emir Kovačević (Interreligious Council of Bosnia and Herzegovina), Freedom of religion at work place in Bosnia and Herzegovina, Achievements and challenges
This panel is aimed at investigating the relationship between religion and change in a globalised world. The papers will deal with the following broad questions: how do world religions enable people to bring about change? And how do they allow them to express the desire for change or the impossibility of it? How has religion been changed throughout an increasing process of the deterritorialization and circulation of ideas, cultural objects and people?

The papers will analyse case studies in order to illustrate how world religions take root in and transform the local religious contexts. This dynamic will be shown also taking into consideration the longue durée of the world religions as «great vehicles of trans-historical memory, ceaselessly re-activated» by their adherents (J. D. Y. Peel, Religious Encounter and the making of the Yoruba, 2003, p. 9).

Since its very beginning, the ecumenical movement was strictly associated with the struggle for peace: just a few years after its “official” birth in 1910 the World War I posed a serious challenge (and a serious threat) for the newborn movement and its leaders, first of all Nathan Söderblom. Since then, religious leaders and movements of different confessions often banded together to oppose new and diverse kind of challenges that new contexts of violence posed to them. This panel propose to examine a number of case studies from different continents, to understand the historical roots of religion-driven conflicts and how they are still, if at all, influencing the contemporary setting. Moreover, the panel is going to interrogate the efficacy, in those same settings, of ecumenical and inter-confessional initiatives to enforce and promote peace, both from a historical and theological perspective.

Felix Wilfred, University of Madras
The International Journal of Asian Christianity is a peer-reviewed journal dedicated to the scholarly examination of Christianity in Asia and of Asian Christian diaspora in the West and elsewhere. While other major Asian religions such as Buddhism, Hinduism and Islam have received great deal of international scholarly attention, Christianity is relatively neglected as a subject of study. This journal intends to rectify this neglect by providing a multidisciplinary forum for the examination of Asian Christianity from sociological, anthropological, comparative religion, religious studies, theological, historical and similar perspectives and link such studies to emerging trends in the social sciences such as migration studies, identities, minorities, secularization, fundamentalism, development, and the political roles of religion.

La Rivista di Teologia dell’Evangelizzazione, semestrale (primo numero 1997), nasce dal Dipartimento di Teologia dell’Evangelineizzazione della Facoltà Teologica dell’Emilia- Romagna. Si caratterizza per la sua riflessione biblica, teologica, ecclesiale, antropologica e filosofica. RTE ospita: l’editoriale, articoli, interventi, note, profili, recensioni.
Il n° 41 è un glossario: riprende i temi più significativi della rivista, ricostruendo il contributo prodotto da RTE in questi vent’anni. Il n° 42 presenta un classico indice: gli articoli sono di esegesi, di filosofia, e di ecclesiologia; gli interventi spaziano dall’umanizzazione dell’Europa fino alla spiritualità; le note toccano la patristica e il rapporto tra Eucarestia e città. Il n° 43 ha un dossier sulla teologia di Papa Francesco: dal metodo e dall’orizzonte di Bergoglio si indaga sulle modalità con cui si utilizzano fonti e correnti di pensiero della sua biografia. Tale prospettiva mette in risalto l’originalità di Francesco.

Gerardo Cunico (Università di Genova)
The aim is to reflect on the processes and effects of translation linked with the possibility to connect different religious traditions. Translation can be an exemplary model for various options of relating to others and to otherness in the pluralist context characterising the 3d millennium. Practice and theory of translation have developed flexible and non-conflicting patterns which helped to build a constructive relationship among different cultural systems. | 10.30-12.30 | 7/21.1 | Tradition: a Russian Orthodox perspective. Understanding conservatism and modernity in Russian history and society
Marianna Napolitano, Fscire / Marcello Garzaniti, Università di Firenze
In the Russian common feeling of the concept tradition refers both to national/cultural and to spiritual/ethical elements. The ongoing debate about the role of tradition in religion and policy is connected to the redefinition of the Russian activity in the national and international arena in terms of moral duty and in order to defend its national pride in opposition to the West. Referring to Russian tradition, it is therefore possible to distinguish the Christian values, that come from the Orthodox heritage, from the traditional values, that go beyond the Christian core and are strictly connected to the conservative perspective of the political culture. The main aims of this panel are the discussion of the specific character of the Russian tradition, by analysing the concept’s historical roots and its sociological and political manifestation, and by analysing the definition of the Russian tradition vis-à-vis the orthodox connections (pax orthodoxa) and the Western (modern) world.

Papers are invited for any aspect of the interrelation of church, ecumenism, and society in 1968; from case studies of particular events to placing developments in a global context.

The EuRe Music Study Group: “Fixity, Variability, Creativity in Religious Music”
Olivier Tourny, CNRS/Aix-Marseille Université

Like silence, music is inseparable from religious (sacred, mystical, spiritual) experience. Whether magnified, tolerated or forbidden, it is there, in one form or another. In other words, we are dealing with the nature of the special relationships of men and cultures with transcendence through music. Dealing with the elements of fixity, variability and creativity in religious music raises these first questions (though they are not limited to these): What are the conditions for these features to emerge – or (perhaps) not? What are the limits (if any) to the religious musical work/expression, and to its potential variations? What about the impact on listeners (auralities)? How does variability fit with fixity? In what way may creativity be exercised in the face of either fixity or variability? In which ways does the concept of “religious music” interfere with or reinforce creativity, and how do the ideas of fixity and variability intersect with this? How the contingencies of the performance influence the process of creation, (and/or) re-creation, variation, adaptation?

Teaching Islam to Young Muslims
Ignazio De Francesco, Piccola Famiglia dell’Annunziata

The panel aims at launching an international interdisciplinary study group on the teaching of Islam to young Muslims and is willing to explore the role of Islam and its teaching within three learning environments: 1) at school, exploring the way Islam is taught during the hours of religious education; 2) at the mosque and in the prayer rooms; 3) on the web. Studies concerning the teaching of Islamic religion within history, language, literature and civic education classes are also welcome, because these four subjects contribute as well to the identity development of the youth. The research method could be synchronic, diachronic, interdisciplinary, transnational. It might work either on didactics materials (books, videos, etc.) or directly document the experience of the subjects involved in the religious education of youth.

<td>Atheist-Theist Dialogues: Obstacles and Ways Forward&lt;br&gt;Peter Admirand, Dublin City University&lt;br&gt;&lt;br&gt;The atheist-theist dialogue will become ever more important as the number of atheist and humanist thinkers continue to increase in many parts of the world, and as younger generations profess less attachment to any one religion. While theists in the West often disparaged atheist positions, many New Atheist texts only seemed to embody another extreme. It was as if there is only conflict where atheists and theists cannot spiritually and intellectually enrich and challenge one another. More recently (see Ruse, Kitcher, Steadman, Crane, Bullivant, and Ryan), there have been sobering and compassionate attempts to understand the Other, and where possible, seek greater connections and partnership among theists and atheists. We welcome papers examining the tensions, aims, key texts (in philosophy, theology, literature, history, and science), interactions, interfaith groups, and crucial questions discussing and analyzing the past, present, and future of atheist-theist dialogue and encounters.&lt;br&gt;&lt;brChair: Peter Admirand (Dublin City University)&lt;br&gt;&lt;brSpeakers:&lt;br&gt;• Marek Sullivan (University of Oxford), Secular Rage in a Secular Age: New Atheism and the Post-secular&lt;br&gt;• David Colomer Bea (Fundació Joan Maragall - Cristianisme i Cultura), Crimes against Religion in Secular Europe: Legal Perspective&lt;br&gt;• Benjamin Schewel (University of Virginia/University of Groningen), The History of the Axial Age Debate&lt;br&gt;• Peter Admirand (Dublin City University), Atheist Critiques of the New Atheists&lt;br&gt;&lt;brLanguage: English / Italian</td>

<td>The Church in Ireland: the field hospital, after the tsunami, is here [Francesca Lozito, Vatican Insider/Avvenire/Radio Inblu.] The Tsunami is the past pedophilia scandal. The field hospital is the Church today, as Eamon Martin, Primate of Ireland, used to say. The hardest times are passed and despite the Church is smaller than in the past, it is growing inside seeds of rebirth. Even when it has to face the growing of secularism, at the moment represented by the upcoming abortion referendum. Yet the radicalism in Ireland is always existed and is not a question of anger against the Church nowadays, but something in the DNA of the Irish people: revolutionary against the Crown, Catholicism was a reply to the British. And now? It seems that the Republic of Ireland has no economy rules and that kind of deregulation is trying to attack ethical issues. Meanwhile the Church is rebirthing with new parishes, youth people, new pastoral models. In my panel I will show the work done reporting in the last two years from Ireland focusing on Roman Catholic Church, even in the dialogue with the Protestant in Northern Ireland. Since its very beginning, the ecumenical movement was strictly associated with the struggle for peace: just a few years after its “official” birth in 1910 the World War I posed a serious challenge (and a serious threat) for the newborn movement and its leaders, first of all Nathan Söderblom. Since then, religious leaders and movements of different confessions often banded together to oppose new and diverse kind of challenges that new contexts of violence posed to them. This panel propose to examine a number of case studies from different continents, to understand the historical roots of religion-driven conflicts and how they are still, if at all, influencing the contemporary setting. Moreover, the panel is going to interrogate the efficacy, in those same settings, of ecumenical and inter-confessional initiatives to enforce and promote peace, both from a historical and theological perspective.

The Future of Freedom of Religion: International Perspectives

Ana Maria Celis (Pontificia Universidad Católica, Chile)

Religious liberty has found expression in various ways over time and across continents. It is now seen as an essential component of the inalienable birthright of citizens of the world, both in its individual and collective forms. In the second half of the last century, and the first decades of the present century, frequent recourse has been had to freedom of religion in socio-political terms on national, regional and global levels. The focus for this panel, however, will not be on the achievements of history but the challenges for the future. A distinguished array of speakers will seek to address the direction and speed of travel for freedom of religion from their individual perspectives.

Interreligious Dialogue and Foreign Policy: Wishful thinking or visionary realism?

This public roundtable hosted together with the European Academy of Religion concludes the closed-door policy dialogue of the ‘Religions in International Relations’ Initiative of the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs and ISPI convened this year to discuss the growing international policy attention on interreligious dialogue and collaboration as tools to combat intolerance and discriminations and to strengthen peace building. The roundtable offers the opportunity to reflect, in dialogue with the broader community of scholars convened by the conference, on how and why we got to the point where a policy-oriented discussion on interreligious dialogue and foreign policy become possible and, some would contend, even necessary? Is not interreligious dialogue a matter only for religious leaders and theologians? Is perhaps the nature of interreligious engagement changing in the 21st century? Should religious and interreligious actors be welcome at the leading global policy tables? Is interreligious dialogue only wishful thinking, a feel-good rhetoric completely inadequate to face the many challenges, tensions and conflicts of our global era? Is there not a risk of instrumentalising religion beyond its legitimate and authentic role? Or, perhaps, is this new postsecular orientation crucial to a new visionary realism capable of finding innovative ways out of the current crises?

<td>Tradition: a Russian Orthodox perspective. Understanding conservatism and modernity in Russian history and society&lt;br&gt;Marianna Napolitano, Fscire / Marcello Garzaniti, Università di Firenze&lt;br&gt;In the Russian common feeling of the concept tradition refers both to national/cultural and to spiritual/ethical elements. The ongoing debate about the role of tradition in religion and policy is connected to the redefinition of the Russian activity in the national and international arena in terms of moral duty and in order to defend its national pride in opposition to the West. Referring to Russian tradition, it is therefore possible to distinguish the Christian values, that come from the Orthodox heritage, from the traditional values, that go beyond the Christian core and are strictly connected to the conservative perspective of the political culture. The main aims of this panel are the discussion of the specific character of the Russian tradition, by analysing the concept’s historical roots and its sociological and political manifestation, and by analysing the definition of the Russian tradition vis-à-vis the orthodox connections (pax orthodoxa) and the Western (modern) world. Introduction of the social networking platform helped to enhance communication: World has become a smaller place thanks to these software applications. However, little attention has been paid up to now to use of social networks for supporting knowledge and above all preservation of cultural heritage. In this panel, we propose to apply the communication skills and techniques made available through dedicated websites and social network platforms to the diffusion of information relevant to religious cultural heritage at risk. It is then possible, through an international collaboration based on social networking architecture, to identify the most appropriate methods to deepen the knowledge of the cultural religious heritage (movable, immovable and intangible) and the technical and operational criteria for adequate enhancement of this heritage that is more and more exposed to dangerous events.

Markus Thurau, Center for Military History and Social Sciences of the Bundeswehr. The panel broaches the tense relationship between religion and the military in history and the world of today. Despite the long period of peace in Europe, the world is not peaceful and we encounter in many parts of it wars and belligerent conflicts whose global consequences are also shaking the European states. The ideal of non-violence and the criticism of the just war theory collide with the international responsibility to protect. How do religious communities interpret the use of military force? What do they say about military ethics? What attitude do soldiers themselves have towards religion and ethics? A look into history is important in these contexts, since the relationship between religion and the military has undergone profound changes in the 20th century. How was the influence of religious communities on the civil-military relationship? What consequences had the interactions between religious beliefs and the military culture? How have chaplains interpreted war crimes?

68. Religious education and Muslim detainees in Italy and Europe

Ignazio De Francesco, Piccola Famiglia dell'Annunziata

The panel aims at exploring the issue of religious education of Muslim detainees in detention institutes in Italy and Europe. The high percentage of Muslims among the detainee population requires both to find new ways to guarantee the right to exercise their religion and to involve religion in the educational projects dedicated to them. What could educators do to make of Islam an asset for re-socialization and not a threat which needs to be neutralized? Are there alternatives to the search for a “moderate Islam”? How do educators work on Islamic religious education while also promoting pluralistic values, gender equality, individual freedoms and solidarity?

69. Teaching Islam to Young Muslims

Ignazio De Francesco, Piccola Famiglia dell'Annunziata

The panel aims at launching an international interdisciplinary study group on the teaching of Islam to young Muslims and is willing to explore the role of Islam and its teaching within three learning environments: 1) at school, exploring the way Islam is taught during the hours of religious education; 2) at the mosque and in the prayer rooms; 3) on the web. Studies concerning the teaching of Islamic religion within history, language, literature and civic education classes are also welcome, because these four subjects contribute as well to the identity development of the youth. The research method could be synchronic, diachronic, interdisciplinary, transnational. It might work either on didactics materials (books, videos, etc.) or directly document the experience of the subjects involved in the religious education of youth.

Aemilia Hotel, Sala Felsina | 7/74.1 | How to teach religion in interdisciplinary context
Jocelyne Cesari, University of Birmingham/Georgetown University
Even before 9/1, we have witnessed a significant increase in scholarship about religion and its influence on international conflicts and domestic politics. Research into religion and politics typically suffers from a familiar problem, whether it is a ‘theological’ topic within political sciences or a ‘political’ topic within theology and the study of religion: theologians often lack an adequate grounding in political science, and scholars of political science have not received formal training in theologies. In this respect, informed theological research (broadly conceived to include empirical inquiry) can play an important role in shaping the political international agendas that touch on religion such as conflict, the rule of law and human rights or sustainable development. To this purpose, creating the conditions for a truly interdisciplinary training of the new generation of scholars is key. This panel will present ongoing innovative experiences of such training currently happening either in political science or theology departments in Europe by discussing the challenges of designing curriculum, of teaching the same topic from a dual disciplinary point of view and expanding students experience without diluting their disciplinary credentials.

These two sessions explore the papacy of Pope Francis as he nears the fifth anniversary of his election as pontiff. We invite submissions of papers of 20 mins length from multiple disciplinary angles, including but not limited to theological, historical, political, social, media, liturgical, economic, etc. etc. What have been the most significant achievements of the papacy so far? What have been the most important changes he has introduced across the church? What are the areas where there is work to do and where challenges remain? What features best epitomize his ecclesiological vision for the church and its mission? What have been his most astute appointments both in curial terms and in terms of the global episcopate? Among other areas of focus, the speakers will explore the ecclesiological, ecumenical and interreligious dialogue aspects of the pontificate as well as comparing Francis’ papacy with other historical periods of church history.

Being grounded in legal and philosophical discourses, human rights came into the focus of political scientists, anthropologists, and sociologists when the growing variance in implementation of human rights standards became more evident in different socio-political and cultural contexts. Within this frame, the relationship between Religion and Human rights attracts ever-increasing interest. Study of Religion and human rights is an interdisciplinary challenge for the social scientists as it appeals to understand the mechanisms of governing religion, schemes of religious agency differentiation, questioning by that what religion is and what can be considered as religious. This scientific enterprise forces to reconsider the disciplinary boundaries within social sciences and law, theology, and philosophy.

Davide Dainese, Università di Bologna
The issue of the Primacy of the Bishop of Rome during the Late Antiquity is a well-researched topic in the fields of both History of Christianity and Roman History. Nevertheless, the researches of the last two decades — exp. those related to the figure and the legacy of the emperor Constantine the Great — still requires a bibliographical update in the perspective of a multidisciplinary approach. As a consequence, the main aim of this panel is to gather historians, jurists and theologians to discuss the main features of this historiographical problem between the III and the VI century.

| 15.45-17.45 | 7/32.2 | Use of websites and social networks to monitor religious cultural heritage at risk. Giuseppe Maino, Cities of Memory. Introduction of the social networking platform helped to enhance communication: World has become a smaller place thanks to these software applications. However, little attention has been paid up to now to use of social networks for supporting knowledge and above all preservation of cultural heritage. In this panel, we propose to apply the communication skills and techniques made available through dedicated websites and social network platforms to the diffusion of information relevant to religious cultural heritage at risk. It is then possible, through an international collaboration based on social networking architecture, to identify the most appropriate methods to deepen the knowledge of the cultural religious heritage (movable, immovable and intangible) and the technical and operational criteria for adequate enhancement of this heritage that is more and more exposed to dangerous events.

Religious education and Muslim detainees in Italy and Europe
Ignazio De Francesco, Piccola Famiglia dell'Annunziata

The panel aims at exploring the issue of religious education of Muslim detainees in detention institutes in Italy and Europe. The high percentage of Muslims among the detainee population requires both to find new ways to guarantee the right to exercise their religion and to involve religion in the educational projects dedicated to them. What could educators do to make of Islam an asset for re-socialization and not a threat which needs to be neutralized? Are there alternatives to the search for a “moderate Islam”? How do educators work on Islamic religious education while also promoting pluralistic values, gender equality, individual freedoms and solidarity?

Modern Philosophy of Religion: Concepts - Approaches - Methods
Hans-Peter Grosshans, European Society for the Philosophy of Religion (ESPR)

The two days panel is organised by the European Society for the Philosophy of Religion (ESPR) and is about concepts, approaches and methods in modern philosophy of religion.

The papers discuss the empirical turn in research on religion and its implications and limits, challenged by a new emphasis on metaphysics and on transcendental arguments in philosophy of religion. But as well papers may discuss, for example, new forms of critique of religion after the end of general abstract critique of religion, which help to evaluate critically concrete doctrines and practices of religions. But as well papers are welcome, which discuss aspects of important conceptions in philosophy of religion.

| 15.45-17.45 Aemilia Hotel, Sala Felsina | 7/74.2 | How to teach religion in interdisciplinary context
Jocelyne Cesari, University of Birmingham/Georgetown University

Even before 9/1, we have witnessed a significant increase in scholarship about religion and its influence on international conflicts and domestic politics. Research into religion and politics typically suffers from a familiar problem, whether it is a ‘theological’ topic within political sciences or a ‘political’ topic within theology and the study of religion: theologians often lack an adequate grounding in political science, and scholars of political science have not received formal training in theologies. In this respect, informed theological research (broadly conceived to include empirical inquiry) can play an important role in shaping the political international agendas that touch on religion such as conflict, the rule of law and human rights or sustainable development. To this purpose, creating the conditions for a truly interdisciplinary training of the new generation of scholars is key. This panel will present ongoing innovative experiences of such training currently happening either in political science or theology departments in Europe by discussing the challenges of designing curriculum, of teaching the same topic from a dual disciplinary point of view and expanding students experience without diluting their disciplinary credentials.

| 15.45-17.45 | 7/79.2 | The Francis Factor Five Years On: Taking Stock, Looking Forward
Gerard Mannion, Georgetown University
These two sessions explore the papacy of Pope Francis as he nears the fifth anniversary of his election as pontiff. We invite submissions of papers of 20 mins length from multiple disciplinary angles, including but not limited to theological, historical, political, social, media, liturgical, economic, etc. etc. What have been the most significant achievements of the papacy so far? What have been the most important changes he has introduced across the church? What are the areas where there is work to do and where challenges remain? What features best epitomize his ecclesiological vision for the church and its mission? What have been his most astute appointments both in curial terms and in terms of the global episcopate? Among other areas of focus, the speakers will explore the ecclesiological, ecumenical and interreligious dialogue aspects of the pontificate as well as comparing Francis’ papacy with other historical periods of church history.

Giuseppe Giordan, Università di Padova
Being grounded in legal and philosophical discourses, human rights came into the focus of political scientists, anthropologists, and sociologists when the growing variance in implementation of human rights standards became more evident in different socio-political and cultural contexts. Within this frame, the relationship between Religion and Human rights attracts ever-increasing interest. Study of Religion and human rights is an interdisciplinary challenge for the social scientists as it appeals to understand the mechanisms of governing religion, schemes of religious agency differentiation, questioning by that what religion is and what can be considered as religious. This scientific enterprise forces to reconsider the disciplinary boundaries within social sciences and law, theology, and philosophy.

| 15.45-17.45 | 7/121   | Citizenship, gender, religious identityForum per i Problemi della Pace e della Guerra

This panel aims at exploring how the two dimensions of gender and religious identity interact in the construction of innovative models of citizenship, in the context of pluralist democracies. As European democracies are becoming increasingly multi-cultural and multi-religious, women’s access to the public sphere is confronted with a new set of challenges as it may be denied both in the name of gender as well as in the name of “cultural diversity”. Women’s “rights” often ends up being a pawn in identity conflict that have little or nothing to do with a genuine commitment to gender justice. Adopting an intersectionality approach, the panel will discuss theoretical patterns as well as best practices that may empower and promote full agency and participation for women in post secular democratic societies.

The Catholic Church faces the challenge of maintaining its relevance in an increasingly secularized society. On issues ranging from sexuality and gender equality to economic policy and social welfare, the church hierarchy is frequently out-of-step with Catholics and non-Catholics alike. In Postsecular Catholicism, Michele Dillon argues that the Church’s relevance is increasingly contingent on its ability to incorporate secular experiences and expectations into the articulation of the Church’s teachings.

Laura Sabrina Martucci, Università di Bari “Aldo Moro”
What is the real relationship between the existing forms of (religious) terrorism and Islam? And how do the constitutional democracies react in times of emergency and threats of so-called Islamic terrorism? The European Parliament Resolution on “Prevention of radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations” (no. 2015/2063) as well as the 2016 Italian draft law (A.C. 3558-A) have highlighted the need to combine repressive rules with preventive actions. This also means that, in order to prevent terrorist acts, the intercultural integration should be supported by measures of de-radicalisation. This approach will require a culture of tolerance and pluralism, which is able to discern the positive signals coming from the more moderate Muslims. The panel focuses the attention on these issues, while referring to the first program in Italy on de-radicalization, which is currently taking place in Bari under the supervision of the local Public Prosecutor.

Davide Dainese, Università di Bologna

The issue of the Primacy of the Bishop of Rome during the Late Antiquity is a well-researched topic in the fields of both History of Christianity and Roman History. Nevertheless, the researches of the last two decades — exp. those related to the figure and the legacy of the emperor Constantine the Great — still requires a bibliographical update in the perspective of a multidisciplinary approach. As a consequence, the main aim of this panel is to gather historians, jurists and theologians to discuss the main features of this historiographical problem between the III and the VI century.

Anna Fedele (Centro em Rede de Investigação em Antropologia, Instituto Universitário de Lisboa) / Stefania Palmisano (Università di Torino)

From the mid-1990s in Europe there has been an increasing scholarly interest in the intersections of gender and religion. The analysis of the transformations of religious expression within traditional religions as well as the study of contemporary forms of spirituality demonstrate a gendered specificity and suggest the necessity to introduce gender as a basic analytical category for the social scientific study of religion. This panel invites contributions using a gender lens to explore religious phenomena. These are some of the main topics we aim to address: - Female/Male/LGBTQ religious agency - The relationship between body and (public and private) space - Sexuality - Changing gender roles in a social context of hybridization processes - The (often ambivalent) role and status of women and members of the LGBTQ community in the administration of the sacred. Envisaging an interdisciplinary panel, we welcome contributions from different disciplines based on empirical research.

Religious laws are at the center of complex dynamics involving individuals, communities and secular powers. In the context of the secularization process these laws seems to be subject to conflicting pressures. If on one hand their rootedness in immutable holy books implies the risk of the perception of their distance from everyday needs and the consequent distancing of the faithful, on the other the adoption of a modern approach causes resistances due to the concern for irredeemable rifts with the tradition and the theological framework. This internal crisis is accompanied by a new contextualization of religion in the social arena which affects also the definition of the “distinction of orders” in law. Researching a balance between tradition and reformability, between law and theology, between past, present and future is a challenge for law and religion scholars. The aim of the Panel is to investigate the changements in religious laws and also their effects on secular legislations.

The Orthodox Tradition and the Imperative of Reform

Pantelis Kalaitzidis, Volos Academy for Theological Studies

The Orthodox Church defines itself as the church of the tradition that preserves the fullness of faith. In this line, the ecclesial tradition is presented by some contemporary Orthodox theologians as what is novel in history and comes from the depths of the eschaton, in order to restore everything. However, such an overemphasis on tradition in Orthodoxy, combined with historical factors (e.g. Ottoman yoke), often led to an understanding of any reform and even renewal as a betrayal of Orthodox tradition and spirituality. In this context the Orthodox Church finds itself trapped and stuck in a “fundamentalism of tradition.” This situation prevents the Orthodox Church from participating creatively and actively in today’s rapidly changing world. The present panel seeks to highlight the imperative and possibility to make room for reforms in Orthodoxy when its theology and experience be considered in the light of a robust theology of the Holy Spirit and an eschatological outlook.

Criticism of Transhumanism

Vladimir Katasonov, SS Cyril and Methodius Institute of Advanced Studies (Moscow)

On a wave of rapid development of modern technologies the problem of creation of artificial person, a cyborg, is more and more persistently put. Man endowed from God by the creative ability, aspires to compete to his Creator, aspires to create a more perfect being. It was formulated transhumanism program. On this way many technological victories have been gained: the mechanical analogues of human walking, problem of the pattern recognition was partly solved. The problem of creation of artificial intelligence rises before researchers more persistently. However, in a problem of electronic modelling of person two opposite traditions face: Christian anthropology and the nature of information technics.

Issues concerning plurality of Religions
Sergio Sorrentino, Università di Salerno

In today conditions of a globalization and overlapping cultures religion (whatever it may mean) gets in a very difficult situation; one that makes it very hard to get off with suitable understanding of religious world. Religion is almost all over in our contemporary world either brought back to a relativism of beliefs (whatever belief is fitting for setting up a religious faith) or to a fundamentalism of a unique true religious faith. This way religion occurs mostly as a variety of human beliefs and practices that are based upon our striving for making a sense of our (known, imagined or desired) world or giving it a meaningful order. This very mobile universe of unfathomable plurality of religious beliefs (and practices) is constantly oscillating between the poles of irrelevance or meaningless matter (getting into relativism or irreligion) or of utmost and unique value (with the implied risk of integralism or fundamentalism) of human existence. Therefrom arise the necessity of better comprehending religion and her differing into a plurality. That might lead us (i.e. philosophy of religion, theology, and even peoples striving to understand religious universe) to better think of the nature and essence of religion, of the criteria of her authenticity or inauthenticity, of the reasons of her plurality on the level of individuals, groups and societies. In this panel we will try to discuss about the following issues:

1. What is religion and what does distinguish religions from each other?
2. What does make difference between religions or between religion and (not-, un-) a-religion?
3. What does discriminate religion from a-religion and why? Indeed on the level of individual attitude in relation to God, to world (Universe), to our own cultural set; on the level of community or social group that makes up a belonging; on the level of membership of a human group or of a political society
4. Religion against relativism (without religion): are all religions equally legitimate or are there criteria that legitimate a religious group (or individuals), or on the opposite de-legitimate them?
5. Individuals, human groups, social sets or cultures on the background of religion.

De-radicalizing and Preventing Religiously Motivated Terrorism

Laura Sabrina Martucci, Università di Bari “Aldo Moro”

What is the real relationship between the existing forms of (religious) terrorism and Islam? And how do the constitutional democracies react in times of emergency and threats of so-called Islamic terrorism? The European Parliament Resolution on “Prevention of radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations” (no. 2015/2063) as well as the 2016 Italian draft law (A.C. 3558-A) have highlighted the need to combine repressive rules with preventative actions. This also means that, in order to prevent terrorist acts, the intercultural integration should be supported by measures of de-radicalisation. This approach will require a culture of tolerance and pluralism, which is able to discern the positive signals coming from the more moderate Muslims. The panel focuses the attention on these issues, while referring to the first program in Italy on de-radicalization, which is currently taking place in Bari under the supervision of the local Public Prosecutor.

Religious universities and professional education: Positive Influence or Prejudicial effect?
Jessica Giles, The Open University

This panel will consider issues arising from the appeal in Law Society of British Columbia v. Trinity Western University, et al. and related cases: (OJLR [2017] 6(1), pp 207–210, 210-213, 213-215). In those cases, the Canadian bar associations refused to approve TWU as a recognized law school because of a community covenant, including a chastity clause, signed by students upon admission to the university. The case has implications in relation to the autonomous existence of religious communities and how far religiously-affiliated academic institutions can establish voluntary religious codes of conduct; the extent to which the right to freedom of religion and belief is linked to the ability of individuals to manifest their beliefs within communities and; the extent of the right to freedom of association. The panel will also discuss the implications of TWU for the study and teaching of professional ethics.

<td>“Theology and Media Theory” panel aims at investigating synergies between fields mentioned in its title. Medium and mediation are not untouched phenomena in Christian theology, yet there is no such thing like theological media theory. From this vantage point it is possible to came to conclusion that theology today needs to develop its own media theory. At the same time, it may be objected that secular media theory has a long tradition of discerning what medium and process of mediation is, thus why do we need a distinct theological media theory in situation when discourses on media continue to multiply? We may claim against this objection that theory lacking the space for God does not satisfy believing mind, and perhaps also that theology has a valuable perspective to offer in contemporary debates related to media theory. Media world significantly transforms the human subjectivity, and this fact asks for new theological reflection of humanity and the self.</td>

<td>In recent years in the Western countries there has been an intensive growth of groups propagating nationalistic ideologies. Media reports and observations from social media sites have been confirmed in the recent wave of research from PEW. In addition, this research has shown that nationalist groups are building their identities on the basis of religion, justifying their activities as being mandated by God, by love for one’s country, and consequently presenting their actions as a virtue. On the basis of a panel discussion we aim to familiarize ourselves with the core principles of contemporary nationalist movements, in particular their attempts at providing religious justifications for these principles. We will seek to analyse in detail the reactions of representatives of various Christian traditions to the appearance of nationalistic groups.</td>

The litany derives from ancient religious rites. Throughout the ages, however, it spread across many countries and became much more than a mere form of prayer. In our research on litanic verse we have traced the contribution to the litanic tradition of poetry of various European nations: http://www.wiersz.uw.edu.pl/gb/. We propose to extend the scope of our research regarding the fact that the litany may be of interest to scholars specializing in areas such the emergence of national identities and religious minorities, the crossover between art and religion and the cultural exchanges between various nations. Scholars participating in our panel focus on litanies and their forms and representations in liturgy, literature, music, and the visual arts.

This will be a panel which showcases the work of libraries, academic or intellectual centers related to existing or ongoing projects that are born-digital or are digital representations of physical collections, or a hybrid of both. Attention will be give to philosophical and theoretical underpinnings which drive projects. Looking within the context of centers and libraries devoted to theological or religious studies collections, special attention will be paid to the impact these disciplines influence and shape burgeoning technologies or utilize already existing ones.

What is the real relationship between the existing forms of (religious) terrorism and Islam? And how do the constitutional democracies react in times of emergency and threats of so-called Islamic terrorism? The European Parliament Resolution on “Prevention of radicalisation and recruitment of European citizens by terrorist organisations” (no. 2015/2063) as well as the 2016 Italian draft law (A.C. 3558-A) have highlighted the need to combine repressive rules with preventive actions. This also means that, in order to prevent terrorist acts, the intercultural integration should be supported by measures of de-radicalisation. This approach will require a culture of tolerance and pluralism, which is able to discern the positive signals coming from the more moderate Muslims. The panel focuses the attention on these issues, while referring to the first program in Italy on de-radicalization, which is currently taking place in Bari under the supervision of the local Public Prosecutor.

Language: Italian
Religious laws are at the center of complex dynamics involving individuals, communities and secular powers. In the context of the secularization process these laws seems to be subject to conflicting pressures. If on one hand their rootedness in immutable holy books implies the risk of the perception of their distance from everyday needs and the consequent distancing of the faithful, on the other the adoption of a modern approach causes resistances due to the concern for irredeemable rifts with the tradition and the theological framework. This internal crisis is accompanied by a new contextualization of religion in the social arena which affects also the definition of the “distinction of orders” in law. Researching a balance between tradition and reformability, between law and theology, between past, present and future is a challenge for law and religion scholars. The aim of the Panel is to investigate the changes in religious laws and also their effects on secular legislations.
